The Young Archaeologists' Club is the only UK group of its kind for young people who are interested in finding out about archaeology. The UK club is coordinated by the Council for British Archaeology and operates at two levels: individual and branch membership. The network of branches throughout Scotland is coordinated and supported by CSA.

The Young Archaeologists' Club Scottish Network is supported by Historic Scotland, the Esmee Fairbairn Charitable Trust, the Russell Trust and the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

CSA is an independent voluntary body which promotes informed opinion concerning the study and conservation of Scotland's archaeological heritage, and brings together individuals, societies and organisations in order to do so.

CSA is accepted as a charity by the Inland Revenue in Scotland No. 43304

Acknowledgements

The resource pack has been compiled from a number of sources and the Council for Scottish Archaeology would like to thank all the people and organisations who have helped produce the pack.

Tam Ward, who has provided material on how to make time fines, carved stone balls, stone circles and lunulae, ancient writing ideas and information.

Philipa Henry, who provided the text and basic drawings for the textiles sections.

WATCH the junior wing of the Wildlife Trust, which provided some material for the buildings survey section.

Geoffrey Stell of RCAHMS, who helped with the buildings section.

Neil and Elizabeth Curtis, who helped edit the document and provided useful advice and information.

Samantha Curry, for ideas and information on ancient writing

The Council for British Archaeology and the National Museums of Scotland, who have provided key advice throughout the process.

We would also like to acknowledge Dr W Rodwell for permission to use the Rivenhall Church illustration, the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland for the illustrations of stone balls and the NMS for the illustrations of the bone combs, drawn by Marion O'Neil.
